Automotive industry research specialist

ICDPA is part of an international organisation carrying out research and providing strategic advice in the automotive sector. Its collaborative programs investigate all aspects of vehicle distribution, including the supply and retailing of new and used vehicles, after sales, network structures and operations.

ICDPA is seeking to engage a person with:

- A good understanding of the automotive industry
- Experience in other non-automotive industries
- A preparedness to challenge existing thinking
- Excellent presentation and exceptional written skills
- Good MS Office skills

The ideal person:

- May have worked in the automotive industry but now be outside the industry – and have an interest in re-entering the industry
- Will be a self starter
- Will have the ability to cold call
- May have links with a tertiary institution(s)
- Will be honest and ethical
- Have an ability to deal effectively with conflict of interest
- Be able to operate with limited infrastructure

The person will join a team of dedicated professionals who have built the Australian organisation over the last 10 years. This position will be part time.

Location – Melbourne.
